

Broad St. Deal Recalls History and Realty Value

Furniture Dealer Rents Premises Once Club of Equitable Life Officers; First of Wall Street's Social Institutions

David Kramer, who has sold office furniture for the last twenty years at 43 and 45 Broad street, plans to establish a new office at 82 and 84 Broad Street, which he leased yesterday from Samuel Untermyer for a long term of years at a rental which will aggregate $300,000. Mr. Kramer's old premises were sold several weeks ago by the Alliance Realty Company.

The two five-story buildings taken under lease will be altered at a cost of $40,000. The changes will remove all reminders of the days when these buildings were used as a club, the remnants of big financial men.

Inception of club life in Wall Street is attributed to this institution, which was conducted by the Equitable Life Assurance Society. The premises were fitted up with dining rooms, baths, lounging rooms and private offices for the use of officials of the company. This was back in 1906. Leaders in Wall Street came there to dine and talk business after the market closed and before leaving for home. It is said that many of the big financial deals of the time were planned there.

The Equitable Society sold the property a few years later to Samuel Untermyer and Randolph Guggenheimer for a price said to have been $235,000. Untermyer took over the Guggenheimer interest when the latter died. Two years ago it was said Mr. Untermyer had tired of carrying the property and was willing to part with it for a little above the mortgage, $160,000. The rental to be paid by Mr. Kramer is said to be on a fee valuation basis of $300,000. E. H. Ludlow & Co. and Rice & Hill negotiated the lease. There was great rivalry for possession of the buildings.
